

Location

The Netherlands

Users

Willem de Ridder, Peter Muller, Ruud Schoonman, artists, graphic designers, magazine's readers / writers.

Maintained by

Willem de Ridder, Peter Muller, Ruud Schoonman, artists, graphic designers, magazine's readers / writers.

Duration

1969-1974

Category

politics, economy, social

Nr. and Title

U 002

Aloha

Initiator(s)

Willem de Ridder, Peter Muller, Ruud Schoonman...

Description

Aloha started in 1965 as a music magazine called Hitweek, equipped with the first four-color offset printer in the Netherlands. In 1969 it changed its name to Aloha, a magazine focused on music, graphic design, comics and counterculture alongside national and international social issues. Aloha was independent and operated without permanent writing staff or editors, so everybody was welcome to write an article or publish a drawing. Aloha was ironic, critical, unconventional and seasoned with absurd humour.

Goals

Produce a publication where a new generation could feel free of manipulation and produce their own content.

Beneficial outcomes

It offered critical reports about political and social issues beyond the official version given by the conventional media and some tricks on how to endure "outside" the system. f.i. On number 35 (1970), Aloha provided a free small guide for diggers called "Free and surprising Amsterdam" where you could find all kind of suggestions to survive in the city without any money. This satirical and radical tradition later continued in 'Frietkaas'.

Location

The Netherlands

Users

Willem de Ridder, Peter Muller, Ruud Schoonman, artists, graphic designers, magazine's readers / writers.

Maintained by

Willem de Ridder, Peter Muller, Ruud Schoonman, artists, graphic designers, magazine's readers / writers.

Duration

1969-1974