

Location

United States

Users

Fallen Fruit (David Burns, Matias Viegner, and Austin Young), Islands of LA (created by Ari Kletzky), citizens of LA

Maintained by

Fallen Fruit/Islands LA

Duration

2008

Category

urban-development, economy, environment

Nr. and Title

U 080

Love apples

Initiator(s)

Fallen Fruit, Islands LA

Description

The initiators, in collaboration with residents, planted 72 tomato plants in 12 traffic islands around the city. Tomatoes were planted on empty and irrigated public space to suggest an alternative use and occupation of the public space. Users were invited to sample but not hoard the produce. At the end of the project, a map was created to invite users to discover these new urban spaces and taste the tomatoes.

Goals

The project tested the definition and use of public space in the city of Los Angeles, imagining new ways in which such spaces could be utilised differently.

Beneficial outcomes

The re-use of public spaces and the fact that public sampled the tomatoes.

Location

United States

Users

Fallen Fruit (David Burns, Matias Viegner, and Austin Young), Islands of LA (created by Ari Kletzky), citizens of LA

Maintained by

Fallen Fruit/Islands LA

Duration

2008